Chicago Investigators

Daumantas' Character - Fred Manasseh Lane

Paper-pushing gov statistician with family problems discovers children are disappearing and their parents don't know a thing. Doubtful but doesn't let a lead go. His lack of willingness to fudge numbers to make his department look good recently got him fired from a corporation (Coca-cola?) to which his parents have sold their votes for subsistence living. His wife, who liked their corporate lifestyle, divorced him. He really liked being married. He now works for the Department of Gorvernmental Administration.

Mai Lewandon (Char)

Mai was a good PI, working cases that slipped through the cracks or just weren't big time enough for the police. Everything changed one day, when she got a package delivered by an anonymous person when she was walking home one night. She opened the box, and inside was just a simple, yet intricately folded, origami flower. That spoke to her, in her mind, about the “Empathic Underground.” And now she can hear people's thoughts and feelings. ALL THE TIME.

Things that should not be seen: There's a drug people have been taking that makes them happy (and also compliant, so it's encouraged by the corps) but the people don't seem the same afterwards, they seem to be changing... into something else, on the inside. Their brains don't feel the same as non-users.
