

Welcome to the palace of the Prince. Why have you come? Will you get what you want, or end up paying a dark price?

Characters

Proximity

Some characters are closer to the prince than others, and their players have more control over the secrets that abound. On the other hand, the closer they are, the more coddled, and less able.

Pick a Proximity to the Prince:

Proximity	Secrets Points	Abilities
Prince	5	1
Family	4	2
Relation	3	3
Staff	2	4
Courtier	1	5
Outsider	0	6

Roles

Once you have selected a proximity, select one of the roles typical for that Proximity. Or if you have another idea, talk to the GM, and invent a new role. Your role is one of your abilities, and a broad one that encompasses a wide array of skills and such that go into such a role. Yes, the Prince's only ability is being the Prince.

Prince Roles

The Prince has no options in terms of specialized roles, they are always the Co-GM.

Family Roles

These are the close family of the Prince. This is not only brothers and sisters, or sons and daughters, but also it may be the father or mother of the Prince (who may have abdicated previously). They have roles of great importance in ruling with Important titles.

Vizier

One player should probably play the vizier. The vizier must take some sort of skill related to spying or international relations, etc.

Grand Duke

Runs a large portion of the Prince's empire.

Relation Roles

Relations are more distant family, sometimes quite distant, but not so distant that they aren't allowed near the prince (for that, create a courtier instead). Grandparents, grandchildren, aunts and uncles (by blood, those by marriage are probably courtiers), nieces and nephews, and cousins (probably first, or from disenfranchised lines further back). Relations have roles as advisors to the Prince, typically.

Foreign Minister

Works closely with the Vizier.

Chancellor of the Exchequer

Deals with money matters for the Prince.

Minister of Intelligence

Also works with the Vizier, this minister is in charge of the various spy organizations that the Prince has in place.

Staff Roles

The Staff are involved in all activities that support the palace and thus the running of the Imperial government.

Castellan

The Castellan is in charge of the Palace edifices, and making sure that they are maintained and expanded as needed. The Castellan is always extremely busy.

Major Domo

The Major Domo runs the household in terms of seeing that operations work smoothly. Everything from state dinners, to travel arrangements.

Head Gardener

The Head Gardener is in charge of the exterior of the palace, its grounds and even the many plants on the inside of the Palace. They work closely with the Castellan, and are just as busy ensuring that the grounds are up to the Prince's high standards.

Chef

The chef is in charge of the operation of the many kitchens all over the palace grounds, and works with the Major Domo when planning events.

Quartermaster

The Palace is an amazingly complex place, and maintaining supplies for it is a daunting task. The Quartermaster reports to the Chancellor of the Exchequer who ensures that there is money for supplies.

Courtier Roles

Courtiers serve less formal roles in the palace, mostly being minor nobility who the Prince tends to allow around himself occasionally, a means by which to keep an eye on them all.

Dandy

The Dandy is a foppish type.

Gossip

The gossip is the courtier one goes to in order to get all of the knowledge they need about others at court. They have a knack for finding out the secrets of others.

Rake

The rake is the party animal of the court, carousing, gambling and generally upsetting the peace at all hours. Fortunately for the Rake, the Prince has a fondness for their tomfoolery, and thus lets them remain at court.

Lover

Like Casanova, this character is good at seducing other members at court (and not just other courtiers). The Lover has a LOT of enemies.

Outsider Roles

Outsiders are always just arriving at court, and would not be there, except for some current specific need that gives them access to the Palace.

Business

A business person who has some contracts or deals, discussions of which have required them to come to court.

Media

Some media hound has written an article that has drawn the attention of the government, or have proposed writing such a story, and thus have been allowed into the palace.

Petitioner

The ancient rite of commoners being able to petition the Prince still exists. No, you might not get to see much of the Prince, if at all, but somebody will be assigned to deal with your petition.

Military

A member of one of the Prince's armed services, you are probably at the palace to discuss a military operation, or observations made during a military operation or some such.
